Baby Who Died 34 Hours After Vaccines Had Toxic Level of Aluminum in His Blood, Report Confirms

The parents of 62-day-old Sawyer learned their baby's blood contained 95 micrograms per liter of aluminum, a level that would be toxic for adults. The toxicologist who read Sawyer's report said the aluminum and antigen levels in the blood were due to the vaccines.

A Maine couple last week finally got the answers they'd been seeking for nearly a year, ever since their 62-day-old son, Sawyer, died Oct. 28, 2022 — 34 hours after receiving his scheduled childhood vaccines.

According to a toxicology report, Sawyer's blood contained 95 micrograms per liter of aluminum, a level that would be toxic for adults.

A toxicologist told the couple the aluminum and antigen levels in the blood were due to the vaccines. She also said a viral infection Sawyer was being treated for could have been a contributing factor.

Sawyer's parents, Melissa — a registered nurse — and her fiancé Nick shared their story last week with journalist Jennifer Margulis.

In an interview this week with The Defender, the couple detailed their search for truth, beginning with how Maine's medical examiner refused repeated requests to perform lab tests that might have shown the culpability of the vaccines — and instead initially ruled Sawyer's death "asphyxiation due to inappropriate sleep position and environment."

The story of baby Sawyer

On Oct. 20, 2022, Melissa took Sawyer to a doctor for a persistent rash around his torso. The doctor diagnosed a viral infection, gave Melissa some medicinal cream and told her to monitor Sawyer's temperature for possible fever.

Exactly one week later, Melissa went to the same pediatrician for a baby wellness checkup, where the doctor insisted Sawyer, despite Melissa's reservations and the baby still having a rash, receive the scheduled childhood vaccines.

These included: RotaTeq (for rotavirus), Hib (for Haemophilus influenzae b), Prevnar 13 (for 13 types of pneumococcal bacteria) and Pediarix (for diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis, hepatitis B and polio).

Dr. Lawrence Palevsky, a pediatrician, told The Defender, "I don't know of any official warnings against vaccinating sick children," but "there are no upsides to vaccinating a sick child. There are only downsides." He added, "And, there are no upsides to vaccinating any child."

Melissa told The Defender that, despite her medical training, she became skeptical of vaccines just two days prior when she watched a video of a toxicologist talking about the dangers of vaccines for children. She discussed the upcoming vaccinations with her fiancé, and they decided to go ahead with them.

"We were afraid that the medical system was going to judge him and judge us and not let him into school," Nick said. "We just hadn't done any research on it."

Nick has two daughters from a previous marriage, ages 11 and 19, who received all of their childhood vaccines "and nothing ever happened," he said.

After the doctor's visit, Sawyer arrived home screaming and Melissa gave him the baby Tylenol recommended by the doctor.

By the next day, the baby had calmed somewhat but was still acting "fussy and uncomfortable," so Melissa gave him more Tylenol and some expressed breastmilk.

When Nick got home from work that day, they put Sawyer into his bassinet for a nap around 5:30. By 6:15 the baby was fussing, and with some help was able to get back to sleep. He slept off and on for another four hours, while his parents kept tabs on him via his baby monitor and visits to his room.

The last time Melissa checked on Sawyer, he wasn't moving or breathing. She picked up his limp and lifeless body and started screaming. Nick rushed in to help but it was already too late.

Emergency medical technicians arrived after the couple called 911. They tried but were unable to revive Sawyer.

The county and state police also responded and, because it was an infant death, opened a formal investigation and ordered an autopsy.

Chief Medical Examiner Mark Flomenbaum performed the autopsy the next day. Although he found Sawyer to be "well developed" and without signs of injury or bruising, Flomenbaum filed a death certificate citing asphyxiation due to a "sub-optimal sleeping environment" — essentially blaming the parents.

"It was near Christmas when we got the autopsy results," Melissa told The Defender. "We read them on Christmas Eve. … We did nothing for the entire weekend."

Asked if they ever learned what the medical examiner saw to make his determination, they said no. "The only thing in his basket was the blanket he was laying on."

The police looked for evidence of child abuse or alcoholism, but quickly concluded it was an accidental death.

Melissa, grief-stricken, told everyone she could to investigate the possible role of vaccines in Sawyer's death.

She first called the medical examiner to see if he would do testing to determine if sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS) was responsible, but was told there was no need "because it wouldn't show the cause of his passing," she recalled being told.

The hunt for answers

That's when the couple's hunt for answers began. "I was looking up people on the internet, on social media. I was calling any number I could find," Melissa said.

Finally, she discovered a suite of pathology tests that could determine whether vaccines played a role in Sawyer's death.

The tests measure C-reactive protein (indicating brain inflammation), liver enzymes, aluminum and mercury in brain and blood tissue, formaldehyde and formalin (another name for formaldehyde). A cytokine panel would also identify various blood factors and vaccine titer levels.

Melissa mailed and emailed Flomenbaum's office to formally request the full battery of tests. The doctor refused, dismissing her concerns and telling her that heavy metals do not cause SIDS.

"They gave me a reason why each test didn't need to be done," she said.

Further emails to the state medical examiner's office, from both parents, have been bouncing back as "undeliverable" since.

A friend of Melissa's told her about Health Choice Maine, a statewide nonprofit working to protect health freedom and parental rights. There she met Tiffany Kreck, Health Choice Maine's executive director, who helped Melissa organize her own investigation.

"Families being bullied by a doctor or threatened with CPS [child protective services] or whatever, can reach out, and we will, to the best of our ability, help them navigate it," Kreck told The Defender.

Melissa said Tiffany gave her a list of things they had to do, "like getting reports and billing information, people to contact, and that's what I did."

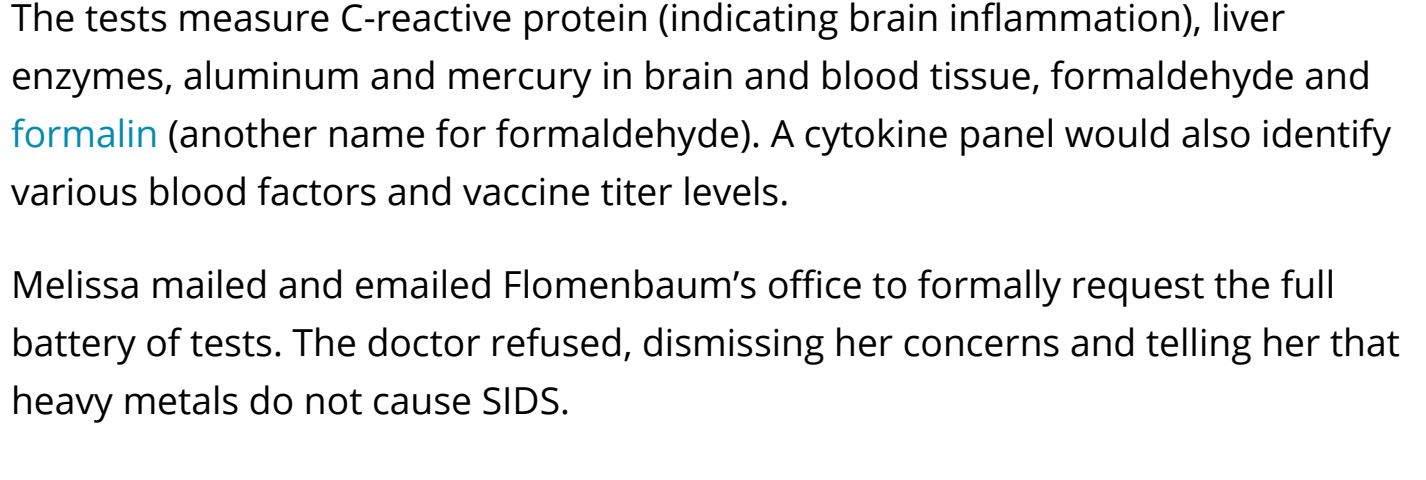
Their primary goal was to find a competent pathologist to perform the lab tests Melissa had requested. They searched the entire country — even enlisting the help of Laura Bono, vice president of Children's Health Defense, Kreck told The Defender — but came up empty.

Kreck told Melissa they would not be mentioning anything about vaccines to the prospective pathologists, so they would be less likely to reject the request.

The biggest obstacle was finding a doctor who was willing to order the tests.

Her OB-GYN told her that it was "out of his scope of practice."

She called her primary care physician and told him she thought the vaccines had played a role in her son's death "and he denied it," she said. Her pediatrician also said no.



"The Wuhan Cover-Up" by Robert F. Kennedy Jr.

ORDER NOW

The toxicology report and next steps

Finally, they found someone in-state who, responding to Melissa's grief, agreed to perform the tests on June 21. Although some of Sawyer's tissue samples had degraded, the pathologist was able to perform enough tests to issue a definitive report last month.

The report was technical and was not accompanied by any guidance or recommendations.

Melissa said, "They never called me and said, 'Oh, listen, this is high. This could be due to his vaccines.' We will do a VAERS [Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System] report, you know, and advocate for other infants that pass away. No, we didn't get anything from them."

So they had to hire a private toxicologist who could interpret the report. That second report arrived last week.

"And she was the one that called us the other day and told us that his aluminum levels were very high," Melissa said, "and that we needed to seek some legal services."

The report showed baby Sawyer had 95 micrograms of aluminum per liter of blood, a level that would be toxic for adults. The toxicologist told the couple the aluminum and antigen levels in the blood were due to the vaccines. She also said the baby's illness could have been a contributing factor.

Kreck told Margulis, "This additional pathology report shows how much our medical examiners don't know because they won't look."

The report also showed high levels of lead, which would not be due to vaccines, the toxicologist said, and asked about lead levels in their house or water. But given that the baby had only consumed breastmilk and was not yet old enough to crawl around on the floor, the question remains open.

After receiving the confirmation about the aluminum, the couple felt "exonerated" from the implication they were responsible for Sawyer dying from asphyxiation, "but we also still feel like we failed our baby," Melissa told The Defender.

"Me being a nurse," she said, "I felt like I failed him both as a nurse and a mother."

Nick added, "From the father's standpoint, you're supposed to protect your family, and I failed at that. It weighs on me every second of the day."

Melissa and Nick are planning to file a claim with the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program (VICP). She said she's still skeptical "because I know how the government and the medical system are."

Kreck is helping the couple prepare for the VICP meeting. "We are doing every test that we can possibly do and trying to cross all of our t's and dot all of our i's before we go into the VICP," Kreck said, "which is historically difficult and harsh on what they perceive to be SIDS cases."

The couple told The Defender they got help reporting the case to VAERS last November, but have never received any follow-up. They did, however, confirm that Sawyer's case was in the database.

Health Choice Maine is also exploring options for a lawsuit challenging the finding on the state medical examiner's death certificate.

Dealing with the grief

Just three months after the ordeal, a therapist told Melissa, who was still grieving for her child and searching for answers, that she had an "adjustment disorder."

"She was pretty much telling me that I was not adjusting to losing my son quick enough, and recommended trauma therapy," Melissa said.

She left the office crying, wondering if something was wrong with her or not being able to let go of her grief. "I haven't had good luck with therapists," she told The Defender.

"I've been going through this all on my own, trying to go through reports and all the information about my baby's life and his medical records. And I'm doing all this while trying to grieve the loss of him and it is horrifically painful," she said. "It's something no parent should ever have to go through."

One therapist told Melissa to take mood stabilizers and anti-depressants. "The mental health care system has not been very helpful in this at all," Nick added.

Nick found that going back to work and keeping busy was the most therapeutic approach for him. "Just keeping my mind focused on other stuff, you know, while carrying all that around," he said.

Nick has joined Melissa in several of her therapy sessions, which he found very helpful.

The couple found a grief support group called Empty Arms for parents who have lost a child, which has been "amazing," Melissa said. The group does a butterfly release for the deceased on Memorial Day and an annual remembrance walk.

They have found support from family members as well, although Melissa said it has been hard to talk to her family about the vaccine connection.

The couple said the loss has brought them closer together. "I couldn't keep going, fighting the fight we're fighting right now, without her," Nick said. "And you don't realize how much you love someone and just how precious life is and what you have in front of you is."

"Cherish it and love it, don't let it go," he said.

"We lost the biggest and best part of us both and if we didn't stay together, I'd feel like I was losing another piece," Melissa said.

DONATE NOW

The couple's journey to warn others

"I just want to make other people aware and I want to put a stop to this," Melissa said.

Melissa said she warns mothers of sick children to cancel their appointments for vaccines at least until the child has recovered. She added:

> "Children do not need vaccines. And if they were to get them, they don't need them until they're at least 2 years old. The problem is, they have a blood-brain barrier that has not closed up until they're 2 years old or later.
> "And if you get vaccinated before 2 years old, the aluminum can cross that blood-brain barrier. That's why levels are so high and it stops respiration and causes cardiac arrest."

Nick said, "I wouldn't tell anybody 'Don't vaccinate your children.' But I would definitely say 'Do your research. Go to the end of the internet, make sure what you're doing is right, that you know all the possible outcomes.'"

"Be more educated and be a strong advocate for your baby," he added. "Because it's your baby, not the doctor's."

Asked why more medical professionals don't speak out, Melissa simply said "Career suicide."

"I don't even wanna be a nurse anymore," she said. "Why would I want to be? But I have to pay my bills."

"Doctors don't have any better education on vaccines than most 10th graders," she said. "Even as a nurse, we don't get the education. We just got the schedule."

She also said that medical examiners should have the right to test for vaccine injuries during the autopsy and identify them as a cause on the death certificate. "The vaccines are killing people and babies and they're trying to cover it up," she said.

While the couple said they found it helpful to share their story, they also admitted to wanting to keep a low profile. "It's kind of a quiet subject for us because we've got to protect ourselves now," Melissa said.

The couple is looking for a good support system. "We're looking for people to stand behind and support us as we go through this journey, for the next questionable amount of years, to get justice for our baby. It might drag on for a while," Melissa said.

When asked about what gives them the strength to stand up and share their story, despite the backlash that such activism could invite, Melissa said:

> "This is the only way that I feel like I can mother my baby anymore. And my baby deserves justice. And we deserve to know the truth.
>
> "He is our reason for living right now. And he is our motivation."

Questions about the state medical examiner

Kreck told The Defender that state medical examiner Flomenbaum came from Massachusetts where he had been fired as the state medical examiner. "It looks like he tried to sue them for wrongful termination and lost," Kreck said.

Flomenbaum earned a national reputation as a top medical examiner through his work identifying bodies in New York City after the 9/11 attack in 2001, according to an article in the Portland Press Herald.

He was fired from his Massachusetts position for losing a body and having a backlog of bodies waiting to be examined.

In 2019, the Maine attorney general's office investigated and later cleared Flomenbaum over criticism that he was running a side business as a consultant in out-of-state death cases.

The Portland Press Herald article details more of Flomenbaum's controversial history, which included a Connecticut prosecutor's letter to then-Attorney General Jane Mills telling her that a judge had determined his testimony in a child manslaughter case was "not credible."

Flomenbaum was reprimanded in 2021 by Maine Governor Mills for inappropriate and unprofessional behavior in the workplace, after which he announced he would not be seeking reassignment to the position.

"He was only supposed to have a month or so left of his term back then and he's still in office now. That all sounds very odd and fishy," Kreck said.

Melissa told The Defender that Flomenbaum had recently left the medical examiner's office, putting the disposition of Sawyer's remains in question.

The couple, with the aid of Health Choice Maine, is seeking to remove Sawyer's blood and tissue samples from the medical examiner's office.

Anyone with information about where a new location might be found to accommodate Sawyer's remains is encouraged to email Tiffany Kreck at tiffany@healthchoicemaine.org.

Decades ago I learned that if someone was in the middle of an infection that most of their immune system resources were going to fight the infection and that any vaccine given at that time would overtax the body and possibly result in a poor immune response to the vaccine. "Bottom line" . . . NEVER give a vaccine to someone who is sick! But then, it used to be common knowledge to NEVER give vaccines to pregnant women, either! What the h*ll is the matter with the medical profession these days? Oh . . . stupid question . . . "let me count the ways": Big Pharma . . . $$$$$ . . . "standard of care" . . . protocols . . . hospital administrators . . . medical license boards . . . cowardly doctors . . . insurance companies . . . fraudulent research . . . corrupt medical journals . . . captured government regulators . . . and even more $$$$$!!!!!

I recently read an article on Medscape where family practice doctors were interviewed about why their uptake of Gardasil was lower than the uptake generated by pediatricians. The repeatedly expressed reason by the family doctors was that pediatricians got $4.00 (yes FOUR DOLLARS) more in insurance reimbursement per shot than the family physicians so it wasn't worth it to them to push it as hard as a pediatrician would. These monsters change their clinical approach not for 30 pieces of silver but for fewer than FIVE pieces of silver. So why would they care about our overall health?

Would be easier to ask WHAT ISN'T WRONG WITH THE MEDICAL COMMUNITY TODAY!
Everything !
They want an office call $$$$ to kill you with more drugs, which they also profit from and if unlucky enough to get sent to the death camp AKA hospital, the payoffs are in the thousands. Trust the bass turds? Not in my lifetime. I find it amazing any thinking person does.

I think when a sick person receives a vaccine, the immune system is so alarmed and distracted by the vaccination that the pre-existing illness is "allowed to run wild." I saw this very clearly in my own child after a vaccination. She was almost over a mild bacterial skin infection (this had been a patch of tiny white bumps on one arm, and just a few bumps were left); the doctor said it was ok to go ahead with a DTaP vaccination.Three days post-vaccine, her entire body was covered with the white bumps -- so many that her skin felt like sandpaper. Also, she had been prone to diaper rash but we had that under good control; within a week after the vaccination, the diaper rash came back with huge raised red areas on her buttocks and then spread to other parts of her body. And soon after that, she broke out in a viral rash all over her body.

I won't go into detail about the other disastrous effects of this vaccination. Suffice it to say that her VAERS report was coded (by VAERS personnel) with 18 different SMQs, including non-infectious meningitis and encephalitis, encephalopathy, and pancreatitis. And by the way, everything she experienced was "classic" for adverse effects of pertussis vaccines (both whole cell and acellular).

The only place I've ever seen an adequate description of adverse effects of pertussis vaccines is the book "A Shot in the Dark" by Fisher and Coulter.

The one good thing about the Covid-19 "vaccine" is that is has brought to the forefront the dangers of all vaccines! When you read studies and research papers and understand what's in these vaccines including SV40 (kidney cells from monkeys is just one of the horrors) you suddenly realize that there is nothing that is any good for anyone. We baby boomers (especially those of us on the leading edge) had 2-3 vaccines at the most. I had a smallpox vaccine when I was 5 before starting 1st grade and a polio vaccine (pink liquid on a sugar cube) at age 10 in 1957. That was it. I had mumps, measles, chickenpox. My four children had the polio and MMR, DPT -- but I was told to wait until they were two or three before starting the series -- they didn't give them all at once when they were fresh out of the womb!! We're getting much smarter now thanks to what we now know about all vaccines and today's parents are going to have to JUST SAY NO to drugs. They are giving children "vaccines" for things they have very unlikely to contract. This is all about the money for Big Harma! It's also about the planned depopulation of the planet. If you don't believe me, do the research. You will be stunned. I've downloaded more than 300 studies on all of this stuff --- things we peons are not supposed to see and know. You would be appalled!! They know exactly what they are doing to us and our children -- and they DON'T CARE!

Siblings and I all got the SV40 tainted polio sugar cubes too. I didn't know about the connection until I woke up after my bladder cancer surgery and a resident asked me about my family medical history which was notable for the many malignancies and unusual kinds of cancer considering our parents never had any at all. "Simian virus forty, baby!" he said. I said, hey, wait a minute and he told me all about it.

I'm with you 100%. Vaccinated my first poor baby until he was 18 months, and my second baby until he was 6 months + the flu vaccine at 9 months, and finally did enough research to argue with the dr and leave his practice. My third baby is 6.5 months and will never see a vaccine in her life. Would love to get some of the studies you may have to share with others. Thanks!

Glad you figured it out. Many Pediatricians' offices eliminated from their practices patients who do not receive vaccinations.
Pharma provided incentives to docs whose practices were 100 percent vaxed, so they dumped the ones whose parents refused. The incentives were big. Amazing expensive vacations and such.

YES! I believe with these covid shots (who were meant to kill most people), that we are witnessing the beginning of the END of 'vaccines'. The maker of the polio vaccine regretted it on his death bed and was sorry he started the whole vaccine thing. I read "The Contagion Myth" and I was surprised to learn that NO VIRUS was found in polio either. Anyway, I do believe this will destroy people's false hope in vaccines and, when the money crashes -- and it will, we will finally see the TRUTH about the hideous money-making evil practice of these evil shots.

The Polio v@ccine was the first nationally advertised v@ccine, it wasn't the first v@ccine introduced. That title belongs to sm@ll p0x v@ccine which was invented in 1796.
Thanks to "Operation Paperclip," America's oligarchs, (namely the Rockefeller murderers) learned about the many ways of population control from the thousands of N@zi scientists, engineers and technicians that we "rescued" from Russian absorption.
The Polio v@ccine, Fluoride in the water, weather modification(geoengineering), and every other evil discovery was immediately put to use here to begin the long planned eugenics program that the elites salivate over.

I wish I could agree that the majority is aware and awake now to the risks. Many are still justifying their jabs. It's hard to acknowledge that they've been misled and lied to. I wish I could agree that this will destroy people's false home in vaccines. Most would do it again.
I spoke with a grandmother in our neighborhood whose new grandchild had died within days of vaccines. Her DIL was charged with child abuse in the death and it took years before charges were dropped after I assisted with vaccine injury information. The grandmother told me that all of her own children had had high fevers and seizures after vaccines, and she insisted that was normal and had no intention of discouraging her family from future jabs, despite the death of this newborn.

The truth is they have been hiding and knowingly lying about vaccines for years but keeping their jobs means more to them than recommending parents wait until 2 yrs old to begin any vaccinations and protecting their patients. The American Pediatric Association has been bought and sold to big pharma and the $$ contributed to the APA and the AMA speaks volumes. As for the husband saying he would not tell anyone not to vaccinate their child, that's truly disappointing. I would be speaking out, talking about what it has done to my family, sharing my research and talking to everyone I know with kids or expecting, "don't do it"! Too many children are being injured for the CDC, FDA, AMA and APA to say reactions are extremely rare. How many babies have to die or have lifetime injuries before they decide their integrity is not worth selling out?

Delaying the shots won't necessarily prevent problems. I delayed with my kids and in those days you could even separate the MMR components and they had no fetal cells either. But my kids got injured just the same.

This makes me furious! Blaming the parents for what the medical establishment has told parents what is right for their children! Vaccines are KNOWN to cause many different problems, and yet our GOVERNMENT covers up for Big Pharma and themselves! NO ONE needs any vaccine, least of all the latest ones, that are killers! Parents need to wake up and do some research into what's being put into their children's bodies, and their own. Quit making doctors your gods and think for yourselves.

It's called propaganda. shoved down our throats 24/7/365 Everyone today is so focused on things like social media and the desire to fit the "norm" they eat up every lie tossed to them. Throw in our public schools, the MSM and the brains are fried. It very sad most parents don't spend 1 minute researching anything, just trust their white coats that think they are God, (nothing farther than the truth on that), and accept their word as such. Sadly, they wind up with dead or disabled children and many still don't get it. Thinking for yourselves went out the window like 2 decades ago. It interfered with that salon/gym appointment.

Modern medical garbage should be what is called "alternative" medicine. Natural, God given medicine was working just fine before the great take over, AKA money grabbing scam.

That's the problem! People don't need to "wake" up (burn out phrase), they need to WISE UP, and also, "do their research" ......people "google" things now and expect THAT to be their "research." They don't know even know how because everything is an "App" (count me out!). I do wish people were as outraged for those being slaughtered in the womb too at the gov's hands. I wish CHD defended them too.

Google owns a pharma company now, I've read. I believe they also shared some board members with Pfizer and Reuters. No-one there to trust then....

Heartbreaking. Something must change. Electing RFK Jr seems to be our only hope. If he doesn't win the Democratic nomination, I plan to write him in and hope you will do the same.

He's great on vaccines, and I love him for his stand against Fauci; however, we have deep disagreements on issues very important to me, such as abortion and the climate hoax. We shouldn't be sacrificing our young to Satan, nor should we be making the so-called "elite" wealthy with their war on the climate. He subscribes to both.

Women's "Reproductive Rights", "Planned Parenthood", etc. = if for any reason, you decide that you don't want your baby, you have the "right" to kill it..."Your body - your choice"! EVIL BS! Where was humanity's rights when they were forced, coerced into taking an unproven, untested, experimental gene editing injection?! They're pushing it as aggressively as ever for the fall!

Nope!! MANY still here - but untrusting in the protection of putting anything on the web. We have to stand up against tyranny. We also need to get our bodies back regarding "vaccines."
